Ned Luberecki

Ned is the 2018 IBMA Banjo Player Of The Year and an all-around bluegrass legend. Ned is an incredible music educator. Ned is funny. He was a member of Paul Adkins & The Borderline Band, The Rarely Herd and, most recently, Chris Jones & The Night Drivers for over a decade. The Baltimore, MD, native, who now makes his home in Nashville, TN, is a partner in the Nedski & Mojo duo and a favored guest on stage and in studio with artists ranging from Jim Lauderdale to Tony Trischka to Ray Stevens to Sam Bush. Since the early 1980s, Ned has maintained a busy schedule of private lessons, along with workshops and camps in the U.S., Canada, U.K. and Europe. He is the author of Alfred Publications three-part Complete 5-String Banjo Method and has pioneered on-air instruction with his popular "More Banjo Sunday" and "The Sunday Banjo Lesson" on SiriusXM's Bluegrass Junction, where he also hosts the regular newgrass show, "Derailed," keeping us laughing all the way down the road. For several years now, Ned has also been the voice of the IBMA awards show. He is a 2011 IBMA Broadcaster Of The Year award nominee. He and his Bluegrass Junction compadres were honored with a 2016 IBMA Distinguished Achievement award. Check out his critically-acclaimed latest album, Take Five, when you have a moment, as well as his new series of instructional videos for TrueFire.com. His latest single, "Back In Baltimore" is available wherever you grab your music. Visit Ned online at <http://nedski.com>.
